

Speech of the Rev. H. Montgomery, at Strabane, on Friday, the 29th June, 1827 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Speech of the Rev. H. Montgomery, at Strabane, on Friday, the 29th June, 1827
Rev. and Dear Sir, As the Publisher of this New-Years-Gift, I beg leave to express my respect for the unsullied integrity of your character, your powerful talents, unaffected piety, and Christian moderation. Whilst an enlightened public, duly appreciating the striking combination of sterling ability and unshaken integrity manifested by you, during the recent struggles of intolerance in the Synod of Ulster, are about to demonstrate their esteem by a most valuable and splendid testimonial, I beg leave to inscribe to you, this private and personal tribute of my most sincere regard. I trust, that whilst you place it in the hands of your children, it may stimulate them to tread in their Fathers footsteps. To the rising generation, I feel assured, it will prove a most valuable gift; as it maintains, in every page, the most sacred of all privileges, the unshackled right of private judgment in matters of religion.
